

Mike Gray Bio

After a career in food research, mainly working with chocolate and ice cream, I retired in 2008, and having been a very part time birdwatcher for many years I joined the British Trust for Ornithology taking part in a wide variety of bird surveys. My main interest has become garden birds and I became an ambassador for the BTO's Garden BirdWatch in which role I help publicise the GBW by giving talks on garden birds, as well as writing articles for a range of local magazines. The more I learn about their life and the challenges they face, the more fascinating I find it, especially when it comes to migration.
